

Abstract

The invention relates to a stop-detection method which is intended for a multi-phase synchronous geared motor that is controlled in stepping mode, consisting in measuring the sum of the currents circulating in each of the N phases of the geared motor. The invention is characterised in that the stop detection threshold is calculated in relation to the change in the sum of said currents.